Dec. 16, 1773

In Boston now, 50 colonials and members of the Committee of Correspondence met at the home of a printer named Benjamin Edes at about 4:00 P.M. on 12/16/11. Later that evening they intended to destroy the tea aboard 3 ships in Boston Harbor as a protest against the British Gov't's taxation of the American Colonies. To bolster their resolve, Edes filled a massive punch bowl with a patent rum

Conviction. Edes's son Peter had the job of keeping the bond bills, which proved to be an almost impossible task because of the order with which the patriots drank. Shortly after 6 PM, the men most of whom were now in a noisy festive mood departed and marched to Doffin's wharf. For the next 3 hours they sobered up - a number becoming violently ill - as they dumped heavy tea chests into the harbor.
